This European inspired estate is the happy outcome of a devastating fire that destroyed the family's home. One of the few items reclaimed from the fire was the 18th century, Spanish entry doors. Reinstalled, these doors were an inspiration to the design team in their involvement in architectural elements, both interior and exterior.

Serving the needs of a large family while maintaining the design integrity of the overall residence was the goal of this kitchen design, double islands not only serve the needs of casual dining, food preparation and storage, but also provided the designer an opportunity to vary the countertops from honed, sea grass limestone to walnut butcher block. The designer incorporated architectural details, material and finish selections, lighting design and custom millwork into a refreshing take on a multifunctional kitchen.
